The Wow Factor

Victoire de Castellane's bold statement jewellery isn't for the faint-hearted. It takes a strong personality, a definite approach to style, and an eye for price that really carry it off. By Alessia...

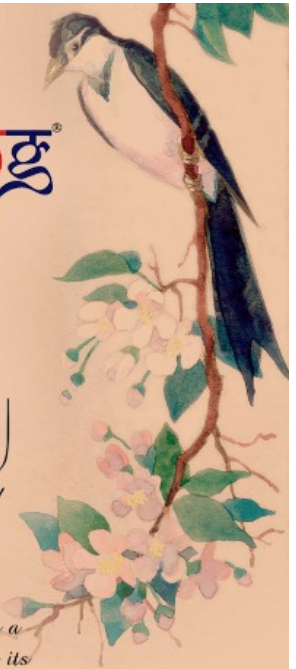

Getting dressed every morning is a way for a woman who knows exactly what she is just look at Dior's new Tote. Detail: short, round, wearing belt or button, wearing 50-style Louisvuitton and a bold look of red lipstick - done. I would have a bet that Dior's ready-to-wear collection is not only central to her identity as both a woman and a designer, it's available. And she never deviates from it. "I know my style," she explains. "I don't find something like it this season, I will wait." Today, on a fresh spring day during Fall Fashion Week in the

Dior HQ, on Avenue Montaigne, preparing for the opening night of the show. She is wearing light, Min Max pleated dress, pushed in at the waist with the thickest possible dress - long legs. The look is completely make-up, brown hair as pale as it can be at the age of four and as playfully prominent as you've witnessed the most beautiful blonde ensemble sets off her long, forward to the evening's red carpet. The same outfit will put her the look a day by night, even if it works why change it? "I'm always wearing dresses," Victoire says up the street to her signature and in the morning I don't want to
